-TCH

The letter t is added to the ch only in those words which end in the ch sound AND are preceded by a short vowel. So, like -ff/-ll/-ss/-zz, -dge and the -ck, the -tch formation is a device needed to retain the short vowel sound when a suffix is added which begins with a vowel. The mouth is already in the t position as you begin to say the ch, so the addition of the t does not distort the sound.

In other words, the t is added in order to "close" the syllable. Otherwise, catching would sound like ca-ching with a long a, as in wa-ving, li-king, etc. With the added t, catching becomes cat-ching (in speech, not in the dictionary divisions of syllables), with an obvious short a. The extra letter is not needed when the ch is preceded by a two-letter vowel pattern or a consonant. This rule can also be paraphrased this way: "Short word, short vowel ending in the ch sound; use -tch."

which rich such much attach

Which rich Dickens character had so much money that he became as attached to it as most people do to their families? Such a shame!!

-TCH (workbook p. 146-147)

Every morning before dawn, inside a tiny cottage with a thatched roof, an old Dutch fisherman named Notch clutches his crutch and gets ready for the day's catch. Then he fetches his hat and snatches a batch of Dutch chocolates from the hutch. He puts on his itchy patched coat and his wooden shoes and makes his way to the sea.

Even in the pitch dark, the old Dutchman can cross the ditch that stretches the length of the fields, unhitch the ropes, and unlatch the hatch on his scratched old ketch. As he works, the gentleness of his spirit softens his blotchy twitching face as he quietly sings "Amazing Grace, how sweet the sound that saved a wretch like me..."

Notch started stitching the fishing nets for his father when he was just a small boy. Every evening, he sat on the dock and sketched the boats as he watched the fishermen arrive. The sight of his father waving to him as he pulled in the harbor is etched in his mind forever. To him, this was not a wretched life, full of danger and hardship. He itched to go to sea himself as soon as he was old enough.

When the fishermen would dispatch him to town with news of the catch, he ran like the wind, eager to do his best. They all called him "Notch" because each day his father came home safely, they put a little notch in the mast of the boat.

When the time finally came to prove himself, Notch was careful not to botch his chance. Other boys retched with seasickness, but Notch switched nets like a man. And when a Scotch fisherman teased the boys about sea witches, Notch comforted the other boys with the truth.

Now, in his old age, Notch teaches the young Dutch boys his trade and tells them of his many amazing adventures during his sixty years at sea.
